About the Author

Paul Trummel, published since 1944, uses the pseudonym Nmesis and openly declares personal or conflicting interests. These conflicts may relate to topics or to opinion, especially when the content draws upon advocacy, experience, conclusion, or interpretation. As an accredited journalist, he conforms with the code of conduct and ethics of the journalism profession, tested by courts in both Great Britain and the USA.

Since 1947, he has worked as a journalist, an editor (commercial and academic peer-review), a technical communicator, an associate professor (visual communication and rhetoric), and as a university administrator at several leading universities.

He has held international press credentials since 1959 and holds two elected international graphic arts fellowships. He earned professional letters in the UK that translated into two baccalaureate degrees and a terminal graduate degree in the US. He has also earned a Rensselaer graduate degree and two US PhD degrees (now ABD). [Sherking Responsibility]

He taught graduate level students at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, Northeastern University, Fitchburg State College, San Jose State University, Massachusetts Bay Community College, and a private institute of graphic design. He held an administrative post at University of Massachusetts, Boston, and has lectured at universities in US, Europe, and Japan.

In 1957 (London), he founded and operated the first full-service technical communication organization, a group of publishing and technical/graphic communication companies where he held the position of chief executive officer.

In 1973 (Connecticut), he designed and marketed the first typesetting system driven by a minicomputer, the precursor for today's desktop publishing systems.

He has won an international silver medal for his satire and a US city award for his educational programs for disadvantaged people.

Since 1992, he has investigated and written several hundred articles on bureaucratic and elder abuse. He founded Contra Cabal, one of the first electronic magazines to appear on the web, for which he develops the site, writes articles, designs pages, and produces graphics.

Contra Cabal has now published for almost fourteen years. Earlier, it published as email for six years. The hits/month now range between 100,000 and 150,000 with more than a million hits during the past twelve months.

Articles cover ongoing criminal activity by bureaucrats and elder abuse. They describe the actions of corrupt judges and gross misconduct by lawyers who file frivolous law suits against tenants in government financially-assisted housing. They outline how managers use unlawful retaliatory measures and propaganda to destroy the reputations of people who report illegal activity and racism.

Washington Supreme Court unanimously reversed a lower court decision that effectively allowed prior restraint and defined journalism inquiry as surveillance and harassment. Repeatedly, lawyers who could find no fault with content instead personally attacked the author or his genre.

A corrupt judge imposed prior restraint and jailed him for contempt when he challenged the court decisions as a basic violation of constitutional and human rights. To further coerce him, in consort with other jurists, the judge then arbitrarily transferred him to solitary confinement.

His published work in the print media for more than sixty years has received no challenge relating to accuracy. People, among them elected judges and lawyers upon whom the public should be able to rely, have tried to stop him publishing information on politically sensitive issues. That prior restraint, and restrictions on personal mobility, has now become a matter of international concern.

American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU - Seattle), International Federation of Journalists (IFJ- Brussels), National Union of Journalists (NUJ - London), American Society of Authors and Editors (ASAE - New York), and Seattle Weekly have all filed amicus curiae briefs with Washington Supreme Court in support of his First Amendment stance.

Seattle Jewish Mafia - Conspiracy 2002 - Jail and Solitary Confinement Contra Cabal 711-07-02

Jail. To detain in a correctional institution persons lawfully in custody of a government either accused persons awaiting trial or convicted persons serving a sentence.

Solitary Confinement. To confine a prisoner in isolation from all other prisoners for 23 hours each day and deny him contact with his lawyer and any other person except guards.

Neither definition applies to Council House. Directors conspired with judges to place the author in solitary confinement without due process of law or legal counsel. Their unlawful acts caused several near-death experiences which resulted from arbitrary incarceration and solitary confinement as a political detainee. By that, they contravened most of the articles in the United Nations Universal Declaration of Human Rights.*

Directors asked for confinement in a mental institution or imprisonment. The author had published reports about Council House wrongdoing on a web site located in Holland.

Doerty jailed the author for almost four months (25 days in solitary confinement among murderers and rapists) using politically expedient contempt of court findings. He again disallowed a discovery process and benefit of counsel. Council House directors retroactively committed perjury and suborned more witnesses to cover up that judicial misconduct.

Washington Supreme Court unanimously reversed rulings by Washington Superior Court (Doerty) and Washington Court of Appeals (Becker) that relate to Council House (30 Mar 06). Seattle Municipal Court dismissed frivolous criminal charges filed by Seattle City Attorney Thomas A. Carr. Both findings vindicated the author of the newsletters.

When will prosecutors bring criminal charges against Council House directors for committing multiple felonies, perjury, and filing false and malicious charges against reporters of crime?

**Kafka and Gramsci aptly described dissent and political detainees, thus:*

Franz Kafka (1883-1924) understood political estrangement. Like Kafka, some modern writers learn to comprehend all forms of alienation from personal experience. That experience allows them to use words powerfully to counter terrorism by despotic judges and people with exclusionary ideologies. They comprehend that writing rewards them for courage in accepting death - a situation described by Antonio Gramsci (1891-1937).

Arrested in 1926, Gramsci spent the rest of his life in prison after Mussolini outlawed the Communist Party. He wrote about dissent in 1928: "I would like you to understand completely, also emotionally, that I'm a political detainee and will be a political prisoner, that I have nothing now or in the future to be ashamed of in this situation. That, at bottom, I myself have in a certain sense asked for this detention and this sentence, because I've always refused to change my opinion, for which I would be willing to give my life and not just remain in prison. That therefore I can only be tranquil and content with myself".
